CARRIES A PRICE ON HIS HEAD

DR. YUNG WING, one of China's grand old men, a Yale graduate, and one of the Chinese who has given more than a half century to attempts to develop China into a great nation, was a through passenger yesterday on the steamer Gaelic. He is now on his way to his old home in Connecticut and hopes to be present when his youngest son graduates from Yale in this year's class. Dr. Yung was a classmate of Professor W. D.
Alexander of this city, both graduating together in 1854. The Rev. Hiram Bingham he also knew, although the latter graduated one year previous.
During Dr. Yung's stay in Honolulu yesterday he was the guest of Clinton J. Hutchins, whose father was an intimate friend of the Chinese.

Dr. Yung's life is full of romance, sacrifice for his country, and many disappointments, yet at 75 years of age he is as full of vigor and plans as ever, and hopes yet to be able to do something for his tottering country.
Dr. Yung has a most fluent knowledge of English, and even when he graduated from Yale he stood the highest in English composition. He was made an American citizen in that year. He decided to return to China and did so in a tea clipper. An ordinance was passed especially for him in Hong Kong that he might practice law, but the English lawyers forced him out.
He then went into the tea and silk business and made $15,000 the first year.

Then the generalissimo of the forces operating against the Tai Ping rebels offered him a high position, which he accepted. He used his position to advance his educational scheme, which involved the sending of Chinese youths to the United States to be educated and returned to China to teach. A body of 120 young Chinese was organized and sent to the United States for fifteen years. After ten years, however, they were recalled as the government felt they were becoming Americanized. During this time Dr. Yung offered his services to General Barnes during the Civil War for service in the field, offering to equip himself, but his offer was refused. During Hayes' administration he received an imperial decree creating him a minister to the United States on equal terms with the bona fide minister, although to the United States Government he was known only as the assistant to the minister. During this service in the cause of education Dr. Yung's headquarters were at Hartford, where he had married an American.

Returning to China about the time that Garfield was assassinated, Dr.
Yung began to unfold his plans for the development of China's resources.
There were four principal ones. These were to organize the China Steam Navigation Company, and in lieu of a subsidy to carry the tribute rice; to open the mines throughout China; to educate Chinese youths abroad for governmental service, and last, for the government not to permit any ecclesiastical body to interfere with political matters. Some of his plans were adopted only so far as the Chinese government adopts anything tending toward the upbuilding and development of its resources.

He was appointed Tao Tai, or Governor of Shanghai province at a salary of 500,000 taels per annum, giving him rank second to the Viceroy. He, however, refused to accept the office, involving as it did the feeling of every official over him, even to the highest member, the Empress Dowager.

He translated the American national banking laws into Chinese and then adapted those features which would be applicable to China, and then set about to establish a bank for the government. His idea was to place the country on a gold basis. He obtained the privilege, the imperial decree was about to issue, when Sheng, who was a favorite, stepped in between and prevented its accomplishment. Again after the Chino-Japanese war he went to Europe to negotiate a loan, but through the machinations of high officials he was frustrated.

During the war Yung formulated a scheme to defeat Japan by striking them at the back door. This was to use Formosa as a base of military operations against the Japanese while their armies were on the shores of China. He said yesterday that it was his plan, as detailed to the Foreign Office, to go to Chili and other South American countries, buy up all their war vessels and, crossing the Pacific, attack the Japanese from the rear.
Again those above him frustrated his designs. As a monument to his foresight in military matters the arsenal at Shanghai was practically built by him.

He was one of the few men who met in Peking the night before the Empress Dowager effected her coup d'etat, as a member of the reform movement.
He was compelled to flee the city. For that and his participation in the more recent troubles two years ago a price of 120,000 taels has been placed upon his head.

Dr. Yung yesterday told of the condition in which his country is at the present time, thus:
"It was generally supposed," said he,
"that after the Boxer trouble was over and the Empress Dowager and Emperor and the Imperial Court had returned to Peking, that peace and reform would fall into line and work smoothly. The present situation in China is such that no passing traveler could tell that there is a strong revolutionary spirit working. This time, however, it is confined not only to the lower classes, but also to the higher and official classes, and also to the younger people and scholars.

"How can one expect 400,000,000 people to live contented under abnormal conditions such as have been made by the present dynasty. Consequently, the logical inference with one who is well acquainted with the real situation of China is that he cannot help conclude that trouble will always arise in attempting to subvert the present rotten regime and to establish a new one."
